

HUGH QUIGLEY LOCAL HISTORIAN

Since failing to write the great Australian novel, Hugh has made an adequate living from writing commissioned local histories. Amongst his anthology to date are such luminary texts as "Leadlight At The End Of The Tunnel - The History Of Lead Mining In The Caxton Valley"; "How Much Wood Can A Woodchopper Chop – The Memoirs Of The O'Connor Bros." and most controversially "Headless Chooks", a damning history of the infamously violent Bodgy Creek Football Club.

Hugh holds few punches as he lifts the lid and stirs the pot on whatever historical stew is on the stove. He's not afraid to print the truth and even make it up if it's not available.

He would be willing to work on the history of any organization; club or even individual. Warning – end result may not be historically accurate.
